

To whom it may concern,

I would like to write this letter to the Anatomy of Islands 2018 Workshop and Symposium in Lastovo Island. I am a student of co+labo in Keio University and I received a call for the application via my professor, Professor Darko Radovic.

My laboratory, co+labo, that I belong to, is a laboratory at Keio University in Tokyo and Yokohama which majors in architecture and urban design. The laboratory focuses on ways to sustainable city design by discovering the characteristics and elements of the site through many researches that learning about various relationships between urban design and residents' activities. In addition, thanks to the laboratory's international activities, I have joined in international competition team with various co+labo members including foreign students.

This year is my first year in co+labo. I think the Anatomy of Islands 2018 is very precious experience, so I am looking forward to join the Anatomy of Islands 2018 Workshop and Symposium in Lastovo Island. I think that there is no opportunity rather than this Anatomy of Islands where I can collaborate with universities around the world and have an intense discussion about sustaining this island.

I believe that the Anatomy of Islands 2018 Workshop and Symposium in Lastovo is necessary for my studies in co+labo, from the thought of international activities, urban and architecture sustainable design.

Thank you,

Jumpei Kawamoto
