

To whom it may concern,

I am writing this letter to the Anatomy of Islands 2018 Workshop and Symposium in Lastovo Island. I am a student of co+labo in Keio University and I received a call for the application via my professor, Professor Darko Radovic.

I belong to a laboratory called co+labo at Keio University in Tokyo, and there I am learning about architecture and urban design. In the laboratory, we aim to achieve sustainable design mainly in urban areas and to achieve by catching land elements and features through research. We are designing both large and small scales considering cities based on the activities of people there and the relationship between cities and various other things. In co+labo, as the name suggest, all the members are good collaborators who are working not only with Japanese but also with people all over the world and with people from various fields.

Although this workshop will be my first workshop in overseas, I look forward to working with people all over the world to do activities to maintain beautiful islands.

I believe that my studies in co+labo and experience in last year's workshop will make an appropriate candidate for Anatomy of Islands 2018 and I sincerely hope I will be given the chance to participate.
